Calling today's federal government "a threat to small business," a coalition of free-market advocacy groups released its latest report card rating members of Congress by their votes on issues it says demonstrate a commitment to resisting unfair government competition.

The Business Coalition for Fair Competition's report on the 112th Congress assigns percentage scores to senators and House members based on votes on 10 amendments on such issues as insourcing, health care, the structure of the U.S. Postal Service and public-private partnerships.
